Coronado, Cal., Aur. 23.—He was such a modest man that it was difficult to induce him to talk about his own deeds, and as it would cause him great annoyance to have his experience exploited his name is withheld; but he was a ploneer of Oregon and the Northwest.

Sold and millionairs and at present spending his time in California, where he is said to be as keen in his fishing and other sports as he was in old times fighting the Rogue River Indians. He did not look a day over fifty-five, well built, stocky, his eyes clear and penetratine, his huir just tinged with gray, few would believe that this affable, cultivated man in evening dress, a man who looked like a staid railroad peads at one time an avenging Nemesis on the trail of the Indian of the Northwest.

The story came out one day in an altogether accidental way. He had received a wound during a struggle with a large fish that towed him some distance, and was having rather an uncomfortable time with it, and he happened

Prosperity Gauged By Pie.

From the Philadelphia Times. curious feature of the prosperous times is the fact that the consumption of pastry has increased argely within the past few years. A well-known baker said yesterday that he is now selling fully 25 per cent more pies than he was four or five years ago. "To what do you attribute this?" he was asked. "Well, I think, to put it in a few words, a great many people can afford to cat pie now who could not when the hard times were upon us. The clerk who went to the restaurant to get his lunch would then put up with a sandwich. Now he feels he can afford some dessert, and there the pic comes in. "A laborer, who formerly was content with the plain fare put up for him by his wife, now stops in a baker's on his way to work and adds a gie to the contents of his dinner pail."

Costre alele, rear. THE THIEVING RINGNECK SNAKE, Life Made Wretched For An Italian Colony

In Maine-An Egg-Stealer Caught. FRANKFORT, Ma., Aug. 24. - A colony of ringneck anakes, which has lived among the piles of grout below Mt. Waldo granite quarry for at least half a century, is in a way of getting itself into trouble with the Italian stone-cutters who have been brought here to take the places of the workmen who refused to complete the Chicago postoffice contract.

A ringneck snake is a rare reptile in Maine. There is a colony of them on Mt. Blue, near Farmington, and another on Mr. Mica, in Bethel, but there are more on Mt. Waldo than at both of the other places. The ringneck is big, brown and harmless with a fondness for leisure and sunlight and an appetite that will take in anything from a granite pebble to a spring chicken. An adult when well fed and healthy, will measure four or five feet in length, and will weigh as much as eight pounds. They will not take the trouble to kill teads or mice as long as they can find offal

The Italians live in a filthy manner, thirty of them finding plenty of room in a house that would be saug quarters for a family of six Americans. One night, two weeks ago, when Carlo Scitino's bearding house was full and eight new arrivals were asleep on the kitchen floor, a ringneck crawled up the sink spout into the sink, crept over the edge and fell among the boarders, slighting

He then leaped through the window into a cabbage patch and in a minute the others were with him crying aloud for mercy and wondering how long it would be before the deadly venom would take ef-

While Mrs. Crowley was having three convulsions an hour Guiseppe Anzioletti, a carter who had been sent to haul some rubbish from the grout bank, uncovered a nest of 200 snakes on the sunny side of the hill. The young ones made haste to angry because they had been disturbed, showed fight, darting at the Italian until he was glad to | snake himself out of the hole, and after flopping about for a few seconds coiled up and died. As it was impossible for the snake to break the percelain egg he had swallowed it whole. When he tries to escape through the sink spout the nest egg proved too large to pass the orifice, and the reptil was trapped. The dead snake was six feet, nine Inches long and weighed almost thirteen pounds. It was the biggest ringneck ever seen in Maine.

> Treasures of Buccaneer Lorencille. From the Two Republics.

Arcas is the name of a point in the coast of Campeche where there is a lighthouse, and the keeper is Rosendo de Leon. News has just been received that on the 10th instant Don Rosendo was whiling away dull time on the sandy seashore, looking for the eggs of the turties which swarm along the coast. To look for the eggs it is necessary to dig up the sand, and while in this opera their usual grooves for four or five days. Mrs. tion in a sectuded spot, among some big siones, he found not luscious turfle eggs, but bright bars of gold and silver. He at once advised the federal authorities of Campeche, who sent a party ng an issue with them until eggs advanced to gather up the treasure. It is said the value of the bars is fabulous, but it is not yet made known by the local authorities. The part that partains by law to the finder, it is said, will be more than enough to make Den Rosendo happy and idle for the rest of his life, and he has already resigned

It is supposed that these gold and silver bars
